Max Lawson, the head of inequality policy at Oxfam International, said:

"The richest 10% of the global population currently takes 52% of global income and wealth, while the poorest 50% takes just 1%.

"We know that high inequality undermines all our social and economic goals. It corrodes our politics, destroys trust, hamstrings our efforts to reach the environmental goals. It is one of the most important and urgent challenges of our time."

"Failure to tackle the widening gulf between the world's rich and poor will be no chance of meeting the goal of ending extreme poverty by 2030."

"Failure to tackle the widening gulf between the world's rich and poor will be no chance of meeting the goal of ending extreme poverty by 2030.

"The richest 10% of the global population currently takes 52% of global income and wealth, while the poorest 50% takes just 1%.

"We know that high inequality undermines all our social and economic goals. It corrodes our politics, destroys trust, hamstrings our efforts to reach the environmental goals. It is one of the most important and urgent challenges of our time."

"Failure to tackle the widening gulf between the world's rich and poor will be no chance of meeting the goal of ending extreme poverty by 2030."