The papal conclave is set to begin 15 to 20 days following the death gather behind closed doors in the Sistine Chapel, where the process begins with a solemn mass.

That afternoon, the first ballot is cast. After each voting round, the ballots are burned—black smoke signals no decision has been made, while white smoke announces to the world that a new pope has been chosen. A conclave may conclude in a single day or extend for weeks—or even longer. The longest conclave in history, held between 1268 and 1271, lasted an extraordinary two years and nine months.

The election of a new pope is one of the most secretive and historically rich traditions in the world. Rooted in centuries of faith and governance, this process determines the next leader of over a billion Catholics as well as the future direction of the Church.

For centuries, the papacy has played a pivotal role in global religion, politics, and morality, shaping history through its leaders. But behind the grandeur of St. Peter's Square and the solemn faces of the cardinals lies a complex and highly structured system that has evolved over time.

So, how does a new pope ascend to the highest office in the Catholic Church? What happens behind the closed doors of the Sistine Chapel? And how much of the intrigue portrayed in books and films reflects reality? Click through this gallery to find out.
